in evening attire, and there was a goodly number of both. The courtly goodly number of both. The courtly spirit of the Washingtonian period feemed to have descended, and ming-ling with the social atmosphere that slways renders club gatherings charming, was an air and a grace that gave evidence of the survival of the great Virginian's influence in this year of 1907, which is to witness the revival and the reincarnation of so many past things.

General William Ruffin Cox, who made the address of the evening on "The Father of , his Country," was gracefully and appropriately introduced by Miss Jane Rutherfoord. General Cox found many new and interesting sidelights on the character of Washington as solder, statesman and private citizen.

His address gave evidence of thorough research and study, of excellent analysis and appreciation of character; of an utter absence of false sentimentality and yet of a just and correct estimate of the American who holds to-day a first place in the hearts of his countrymen.

A reception followed upon the close of General Cox's address. The beautifully gowned women present crowded around him with hearty congratulations and enthusiastic praise, in which the gentlemen were not slow to join.

Dainty refreshments were served, and the club scored another triumph in the history of the many that have marked its social career.

For my part, I regard that amendment as a declaration of independence, because it set my section free from a dying institution. It has given us the opportunity to be strong and rich and independent. The first great mistake was made when sudden and universal emancipation was followed by sudden and universal enfranchisement of those entirely unprepared for citizenship. While the future of the South was still overcast by the consequences of that dreadrul mistake, the great Senator George, of Mississippl, was wise enough to perceive that an ex of that dreadful inlitatice, the great Senator George of Mississippl, was wise enough to perceive that an expost interference of Mississippl, was wise enough to perceive that an expost interference of Mississippl, was post interference of the States. Therefore, it was perfectly competent for Congress to withdraw the right to vote from all citizens within the District of Columbia, when, for a ceptain well-known reason, it was deemed wise and expedient to do so. The Fifteenth Amendment, in imposing the single existing limitation upon the power of a State to regulate the right to take it away "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Such was the power and such the limitation under which Senator George workes while fabricating the new system of Southern constitutions upon whose luminous wings she is now rising from her ashes and establishing a material prosperity which will soon starte the world.

Property Wealth.

Last year the farm products of the South sines were valued at $2,000,000,-000, while her lumber, coal and from products exceed $500,000,000, of the twelve millions of bales of cotton which she now produces annually, the South is manufacturing nearly two millions and a half of bales on her own soil. In some respects the greatest industry in the world is the manufacture of cotton, and upon the South, which produces three-fourths of the entire taple, that industry absolutely depends. To the South, Europe is now sending nearly four hundred millions a year, a sum greater than the world's annual gold production. Withdraw the cotton crop of the South and England's industrial are wenter receive almost a death blow, while that of New England would talter upon its foundations. isting political conditions, under which the two races are so rapidly advancing in material prosperity, are, in their general outlines, the only possible or practicable ones. But far be it from me to declare or intimate that no improvements, no ameliorations are necessary. The basic principle upon which the new Southern constitutions rest is that as fast as our colored citizens become qualified by education or property, or both, for the franchise, they shall be endowed with it. Without fraud or subterfuge that principle should be firmly applied in the actual administration of government. Intelligent and responsible minorities of colored voters thus introduced into Southern electorates can never menace, in my judgment, the political supremacy of a race endowed with a genius for domination. Along with a just and gradual bestowal of the franchise should go an earnest effort to advance the negro race through public education." Territorial Expansion.
